KRCG's FORECAST:

THURSDAY: A light mix of rain/snow is possible early this morning before transitioning to all snow. The heaviest snow looks to fall between 8 a.m. and noon as a snow band moves north to south across mid-Missouri. On average snow totals look to be between ½" to ¾", with areas along the I-70 corridor potentially getting just over an inch. Roads early on will be mainly clear, with conditions being impacted the most around lunchtime after the heaviest snow falls. Temperatures will remain in the mid 30s, falling through the afternoon.

EXTENDED FORECAST: We'll find cold temperatures behind this system continuing into the weekend. Another chance for snow returns Saturday. Saturday's snow looks to have a higher impact on the Lake of the Ozarks and the I-44 corridor areas. Southwest and South Central MO could see several inches of snow from this system. We will find warmer temperatures next week. - Meteorologist Elyse Smith
